"A striking feature of our line—to use the conventional term which so seldom expresses accurately the position taken up by an army—is that it consists really of a series of trenches, not all placed alongside each other, but some more advanced than others and many facing in different directions. At one place they run east and west along one side of a valley. At another almost north and south up some subsidiary valley. Here they line the edge of woods and there they are on the reverse slope of a hill, or possibly along a sunken road and at different points both the German and the British trenches jet out like promontories into what might be regarded as the opponent's territory.
